As women, we are always great with hospitality. Did you ever wonder what it would be like to welcome Jesus into your heart and entertain him there?

During our evening of prayer we will reflect on “opening the door” of our heart to have Jesus feel “at home” and how can we grow in a more intimate relationship with him.

As part of the evening, we will have group discussion, sharing, and a guided meditation.

There is a $5 fee for each session. No fee is required for those who have paid the Religious Education Family Fee or Our Lady of Lourdes School tuition. Registration is necessary and helpful. This will enable us to have enough reading material and refreshments for all those attending. Celebrating Sacraments

4th Sunday of Easter

We can't approach the highly symbolic language of the Book of Revelation with logical thinking. If we try to do so, we will falter, and miss out on the richness of the images that are presented to us. In today's selection, John—not the writer of the fourth Gospel, but another John—sees a vast crowd. One of the elders tells him that these are the ones who have survived the time of trial. This makes eminent sense since Revelation was written at a time when the church was undergoing great persecution from both the Jewish leaders who were expelling the Jewish followers of Jesus from the synagogues, and from Roman officials who saw Christians as disruptive apostates since they did not acknowledge the Roman gods. The ones who have survived "have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb" (7:14).

Here is where logic fails. Every laundry detergent bottle and stain-fighting additive will tell you that you don't make something white by washing it in blood. But when we immerse ourselves in the symbolism, we understand what the writer intends. Through the shedding of his blood on the cross, the Lamb of God (Jesus) cleanses us from sin. Like the white garment given at baptism to symbolize new life, those who have remained faithful during trial and persecution share in the victory of the One who conquered sin and death.

The message for us today is that Christ has brought us into the fold, and that we are called to be faithful no matter what may beset us in life. It is unlikely that any of us will face overt persecution for what we believe. But we must also guard against the subtle denials of Christ that sometimes creep into our daily lives.

Facing the Dragon-Confronting Grandiosity in our Lives

by Ron Rolheiser, OMI

Every so often a book comes along that is truly important. I remember ten years ago reading Gil Bailie's, Violence Unveiled, and sensing that this was a book of major significance. I had that same sense again recently reading Robert L. Moore's, Facing the Dragon: Confronting Personal and Spiritual Grandiosity. This is no ordinary book, to be read, enjoyed, and put away. It is a book to be studied many times over.

Who is Robert L. Moore? He is not a professional theologian and thus is not well-known within popular church circles, though he has had a major impact there through his influence on many who minister within church circles. He is Professor of Psychoanalysis, Culture, and Spirituality at the Chicago Theological Seminary and founder of an Institute for Spirituality in Chicago. What he does in his research and teaching is bring together spirituality, anthropology, history, and psychology so as to create a unique vision within which the human person can be understood, particularly in terms of the human struggle with sin and grace, inflation and depression, violence and greatness.

I first heard him speak in San Francisco nearly 20 years ago. A former student phoned me one day and announced that he was taking me to hear "an extraordinary thinker". I went along and wasn't disappointed. A lot of thinkers are brilliant, but what I heard from Robert Moore contained something else, decades of hard research all tied together in a rare balance. There was no liberal or conservative ideology coloring things, no piety or iconoclasm that was shadow-boxing with its past or with the culture, and no subtle religious or anti-religious bias. I felt like I'd finally found a mentor.

I soon bought every book and lecture-tape by Moore that I could find and during the next half-dozen years, spent literally hundreds of hours (usually driving) listening to his lectures on tape. I also began to integrate his thought and his structure into my own writings and lectures. Whenever I would introduce students to his thought they would eagerly inquire what books they could read to pursue his ideas further. Unfortunately, at that time, Moore's books were not as fertile as his oral presentations. That changed with the release of Facing the Dragon: Confronting Personal and Spiritual Grandiosity. Now, finally, we have a book that brings together his key insights and does justice to his thinking.

What, in caption, are those insights?

Moore asserts, as do our scriptures, that each of us is born with an incurable, innate grandiosity and, because of that, we have larger fantasies and wishes for ourselves than our real life experiences can support. We want, most days, to jump out of our own skins because our lives seem too small for us. But there is an adequate reason: We each have within us the Image and Likeness of God. This is more than just a beautiful icon stamped inside us; it is a fire and an energy that, like God, has no boundaries. We come into this world with the imprint of God stamped in us and that dignity and energy create a godly grandiosity inside us.

And that grandiose energy spawns appetites that are not easily held in check. When we look at the roots of the greed, ambition, addiction, bitterness, rage, violence, and pathological restlessness, we see that there can be no real understanding of these until we first understand that fiery grandiosity inside each of us. Simply put, when you have 6 billion people on small planet and each of those people is secretly nursing a god or goddess inside, then it is no accident that we often have violence and war. All of us carry a dangerous and a pathological pride.

For Moore, the failure to recognize this grandiosity as the root of our struggles constitutes perhaps the most dangerous naiveté of all. The modern fantasy, he writes, believes that we are better off without God and the churches, but that fantasy does not take into account "the rise of the culture of narcissism with its worsening epidemic of pathological grandiosity"

What's his solution? Humility. But can there be genuine humility, given our innate grandiosity?

Yes, we can attain genuine humility and indeed it is our only hope. But, for him, genuine humility consists in two things: Knowing your limits and getting the help you need. For Moore, it is never a question of: "Am I dangerously proud?" But only a question of: "How do I get the help that I need to deal with my grandiosity?"

For him, that help ultimately lies in a relationship with God which lets us healthily accept and use our divine energies even as it makes clear that we may never identify with those energies. We are not God, albeit we need to use divine energy. Our life-long struggle between depression and inflation is, in essence, a struggle to pray properly.

To ignore this struggle is, as he puts it, to "continue arranging unconsciously our own last rites."
